A Place Where There Are Few Strikes Because of the Fate of a Striker. The Balubans, as the natives of the Muansanyomma district of central Africa are styled, enjoy an excellent local reputation as ironworkers. They find their crude material in the form of bog iron ore on the surface of the land. It rarely happens that digging to an appreciable depth is necessary. Their smelting furnaces, which are constructed of clay, are from six to ten feet high, from forty to sixty inches in diameter at the base and conical in shape. The ore is tipped into the furnace from above; the charcoal, on the other hand, is introduced into basinlike side openings, which also receive a continuous air blast, while the iron and slag are removed from the bottom of the furnace about every eight or twelve hours, according to the degree of heat obtained. The forge is a circular building some sixteen feet in diameter, with a pointed roof and open sides. At a distance it might be taken for a park band stand. In the center of this hut is the fire, which is maintained in constant activity by means of a unique pair of bellows, which merit a special description. They consist of a block of wood, generally twenty inches long, hollowed out and fitted with a funnel head made of clay. At the lower end are two orifices, over which skins are stretched. Motion is imparted to the instrument by the action of two small rods. The hammer is of solid iron; the tongs are marvels of simplicity-to wit, a bent palm branch. An iron wedge driven into a timber bole serves as an anvil.

The recollections of the Balubans carry them back to the time when they wrought metals with stone tools. Some of the natives are comparatively artistic workers. Very fine axes, tastefully inlaid with copper, are produced.

Strikes among these swarthy artificers are of comparatively rare occurrence, probably owing to the fact that the malcontents invariably have their heads lopped off and their skins placed on one side for patching, or in case of need entirely recovering the aforesaid curious bellows. - Lor:

Timerousness of Great Men. It has been recently stated by those who knew him well that Mr. Spurguessed it, he was nervous in speaking, and one result of the disastrous panic at the Surrey Gardens in 1856 was that he ever afterward dreaded excitement in great audiences. Atthe Free Trade hall in Manchester, 1872, the orator was in buoyant and brilliant form. Yet before delivering his address he had been attacked by nervous sickness in the antercom.

As we have suggested, this curious preliminary recoil seems to be a frequent characteristic of the efforts | since against all comers. In Austra-Inquiry shows that some form of five years, I met in Sydney, New timorousness dogs distinction like its | South Wales, Profs. J. Donavan and shadow. It may have peculiar and even eccentric features. Mr. Edmund Yates has mentioned the case of a distinguished living politician, noted for his dash and aplomb while in the house of commons, to whom on one occasion Sir Henry Halford, the eminent physician, gave an account of a railway accident. The narrator was elaborate in his description, and it was too much for his listener's nerves. In the midst of ing.-Cassell's Journa

Mr. Armour's Charities. Phillip D. Armonr is a Chicago man who makes more money than the average American citizen would mow what to do with. But Mr. Armour, while a man of shaple astes, with no dezire to throw money nto Lake Michigan for the sole purose of seeing it sink, contrives to betterment of the human race. In public way, excepting the Armour mission, kindergarten, dispensary. etc., Mr. Armour has done little as yet to immortalize himself among the great benefactors, but his list of private charities is a long one. Many boy has he helped through school and college, and many a poor family has he relieved from distress. His personal appearance is that of a man who is in close contact with the good hings of life, and a glance at his some shows that he knows how to pend money for the comfort of his family and for the gratification of the better tastes. - New York World.

Preferred Their Own Society. Emerson suggested to his wife that dridget and Mary, instead of taking McMahon Henry their meals in the kitchen, should thenceforth be accommodated with Murdock, F A-2 scats at the family table. It being a case of conscience, Mrs. Emerson, like a good wife, acquiesced in the proposal, and an attempt was made to carry it out. But the servants objected; it made them very uncomortable; they preferred their own ociety and surroundings, and the family of course cheerfully acquiesced. -Buffalo Commercial.
